PDF The Arabic language is an important component of Arab history, culture and civilization. Kamus Arab Indonesia Naskah al-Wuslf Tariq Al Abbasii.pdf Indonesian Category:Indonesian studies Category:Culture in IndonesiaQ: What are the keys to being a great teacher? I have been working as an online tutor since I finished my Master's in engineering. As a tutor, I always have had the same problem: Too many students, too little time. When I started teaching, I usually put my students into groups, and then explain the material, after I got the right outline, they do it on their own. But when I try to do the same thing with one on one, I can never do it right. There is always something, it becomes messy, and I have no clue why. Does anyone have any tips for me? I would like to get as much done, as possible, and that's what I need help with: How do I get more done? A: An important rule of good teaching is "Give good enough information so that the students can figure it out on their own." So the first thing is to choose a good textbook or other source of material that is suitable for your students. However, there are two ways of using it: the teacher can give the material and then let the students work on it (interactive teaching) or the student can get the material and then work on it on their own. If the material is already interesting to the students, the later may not be as good as the former. However, if the material is boring to the students, the student-run method is a great way to get them excited about the material. If you have not already done so, consider using a peer review system. If a student is working on something, ask them to present what they have done to their classmates or class mates. Then ask if they did a good job, or if there are aspects that they could improve on. This way, you not only provide feedback to the student, but also to their peers. If you want to figure out what to say in a lesson, have a script. Your best bet is to have a short script that you can customize for each lesson. This way, you can tailor the information to the skill level of your students.
