Nutrition classifications can be determined by the presence or absence of components in food. They can be evaluated according to various characteristics, including nutrient or caloric content, the amount of a certain nutrient present, the proportion of a nutrient in a food, or the functional role of the nutrient. Very obese children are at increased risk for numerous health problems that require the use of weight-loss medication. A diet is a way of eating that the body eats to achieve a particular goal. It can be used to lose weight, to reduce the risk of developing cardiovascular disease, to reduce high cholesterol, to manage type 2 diabetes, and to manage multiple sclerosis. Sodium and potassium are the most abundant minerals in the body. As such, they play an important role in the maintenance of fluid balance, muscle and nerve function, blood pressure, and the body's acid-base balance. They are also necessary for the optimal function of certain enzymes and for nerve and muscle excitability and contraction. Potassium is the most abundant mineral in the human body and accounts for approximately 40 of its total weight. Cannabis is a recreational drug derived from the flowering tops of the hemp plant Cannabis sativa (marijuana, pot), though its use in medicine is unrelated. It has been consumed in this way for thousands of years. In the 17th century, Benjamin Franklin ingested large quantities of cannabis to relieve the symptoms of the sweating sickness. Heartburn is an uncomfortable burning sensation in the chest that occurs when the acid in the stomach flows backward into the esophagus, which is the tube that connects the stomach to the mouth. The term obesity describes the condition of having an excessive amount of body fat when one's weight is greater than or equal to 20% of one's ideal body weight. Obesity is a type of medical condition and is not simply a matter of being large, but of being excessive in size. The two major classes of drugs that are used for weight loss and management are appetite suppressants, which reduce or suppress hunger and inhibit eating, and behavior modification, which is used to help people become more willing to make lifestyle changes. One in 10 Canadians is obese. Public health awareness campaigns directed at overweight and obese individuals and their families often include information about the link between weight and a greater risk for certain diseases, including diabetes and cardiovascular diseases.
