THE DUDEBAG LIFESTYLE You know the stereotypical dude who talks about fashion, and he really knows the fashion world. He also knows all the details of what goes into a new fashion trend, and the full story of what happened when it started, so you'd better believe that he has a lot to say about this subject. The guy, in my case, is Christian. While I agree with all of the details that he adds, I also have to challenge his opinion of fashion as it relates to his religion. So here's my opinion of his article. I'm a Christian and I love the fashion world. I'm sure that the fashion world loves me too, but I'm going to tell you why you can't trust it. I'm sorry to tell you this, but I don't wear high heels. When I first started looking at religious clothing, high heels were the first style that I decided I would never wear. I wore heels for a couple of years after I started, but I never liked them, and they eventually fell out of style. I wanted to find something that would make me look taller, so I found Christian-inspired heels. I guess this is a pretty big hint, but it's true. I knew that once I found these, I would never wear any other kind. I'm in a pretty high-heeled position in my life. I have been in the Christian industry for a few years, and I've met people from different backgrounds and faith traditions. As much as I would like to think that I'm inclusive, the truth is that I really only know one way to dress. Not everyone who goes to church has the same style. There are some people who wear jeans, and some people who wear dresses. I have no idea what kind of shoes they wear. I have never worn a skirt or a skirt with a top. I know that there are women who wear things I wouldn't think of wearing. I have had a couple of girlfriends who were Christians and who wanted me to wear something different, but I always felt like I needed to
