Oct 6, 2018 This article is an excerpt from the Wikibooks Windows Vista Cookbook. The "OEMACT" name is specific to a particular Windows Vista version or service pack, which was used on OEM devices that had signed Microsoft's OEMACT End User License Agreement. The "OEMACT" name is no longer used for Windows Vista. For example, OEMACT Windows Vista Home Premium was the edition of Windows Vista for PC makers who sold it with their own brand name, such as Dell and HP. Similarly, OEMACT Windows Vista Home Premium 32-bit was the edition for PC makers who sold it with their own brand name, such as Dell and HP. The name was used in contrast to OEM-branded Vista, which used a different OEMACT. Note that OEM-branded Vista did not follow Microsoft's original branding plan of using the "OEM" name followed by a "ACT" acronym for OEM ACT. OEMACT Windows Vista Home Premium OEMAct is the latest edition of Windows Vista for sale under the OEMACT end user license agreement. The service pack for the Home Premium edition was released as SP1. The service pack for the OEM-branded Vista (note the difference in case) was released as SP2.
