by: UIL SPORBUST Content. Download SPORBUST content is offline, SPORBUST got married in September of 2006. He and his wife are now expecting their first child shortly after the New Year. Anyhoo, SPORBUST doesn't plan on leaving the game anytime soon. As far as most new content, he will be in attempt to make a living for his family and himself. Right now, SPORBUST is trying to transfer the ownership of the 'The AD Network' over to his wife. Many content creators are paid by their fans for the content they make. SPORBUST hopes to be one of those content creators. He has no problem if his fans want to donate to help him to create as well as transfer ownership of his content. Also, SPORBUST is still looking for content creators as well as team members. For more information, contact: beammyk@msn.com. By the time we reach middle-age, most of us are pretty good at everything that matters. We've led successful lives in high school and college, had rewarding careers, raised families and have achieved our own measure of success. But somewhere between 35 and 50, we find ourselves questioning our experience and our abilities. Your body is changing. You're in a different stage of life, and your skills are not always

If I change the variable to -num instead, it works fine: var num = 1000; var neg; var cont = document.getElementById("tNumber"); neg = -num + 100; neg = neg - 99; console.log(num); console.log(neg); console.log(cont.innerHTML = "" + neg); Output is: -1000 -1000 -1000 A: There are few things you need to take care in Javascript. When you assign an integer value, it is converted to a number type. You can convert it to string type by using + sign. You can assign a string value to a number type variable. So, in your second case, you are actually assigning string representation of -1000 to a variable of type number. That's why it works fine. var num = 1000; var neg; var cont = document.getElementById("tNumber"); neg = num + '100'; neg = neg - '99'; console.log(num); console.log(neg); console.log(cont.innerHTML = "" + neg); Praise For Picking Up “The Charmed Life” By Jana Riess Fantasy-Fantastic Fiction The following is a guest post for Fantasy-Fantastic Fiction by Dr. Jana Riess, associate professor of English at the University of Memphis, Arkansas.
