In Japan, it is often simply called, or. It was later released in English in 2012 as The Mai Hime Adventures, and in Korean as Maisa Geuk-soo. Contents Mai Hime: Unmei no Keitouju Shura is a fighting game where the protagonist is Mai, a girl who was kidnapped by an immortal being and trained to be a powerful warrior. The player controls Mai as she fights against the monsters in the real world, as well as many enemies in the dreamworld. The ultimate goal of the game is to defeat the evil being, the Demon King. Mai Hime can be divided into 2 categories: Real-Time and Dream-Time. In Real-Time mode, Mai fights the enemies in a match-3 game board, where the rules are similar to the first 3 of Tetris. In Dream-Time mode, Mai battles the enemies as a match-3 puzzle, and the rules are more similar to the second 3 of Tetris. Each mode has a different goal. While in Real-Time, the goal is to clear the board. However, in Dream-Time, Mai must clear the entire board. Because of this, each mode has its own background music. The story in the game is unique compared to other fighting games, in that it does not take place in a virtual reality, but rather the real world, with just a small portion of the world being an MMO game board. In addition, the characters and setting of the game are far less varied compared to other fighting games. This game is also far different than other games like the Final Fantasy games or even Ultima. The world of Mai Hime is directly tied to the real world, and it is near impossible to simply jump to the dreamworld without passing through the real world. The world of Mai Hime is influenced by the real world because it features real Japanese symbols, and it is near impossible to simply complete the main story without solving a puzzle, as well as defeating all of the enemies. Mai Hime: Unmei no Keitouju Shura has been marketed as a casual game, and was said to be suitable for both casual gamers and newcomers to fighting games. One of the main characteristics of the game is the typical match-3 gameplay, but it has some notable differences from the standard match-3 games. First of all, the objective of each level is not to clear the board, but to clear f3e1b3768c
