2.:Treatment of distal radius non-union with the combination of guided bone regeneration and distraction osteogenesis. Distraction osteogenesis and guided bone regeneration are procedures for the treatment of refractory non-unions after inadequate primary bone healing.

A 35-year-old man presented with a right distal radius non-union following an open comminuted fracture. The union process was slow and painful. The patient's symptoms were not relieved even by surgical debridement and repeat internal fixation. Therefore, the combination of guided bone regeneration and distraction osteogenesis was used. This technique was successfully performed with good functional and aesthetic outcomes at the 9-month follow-up. This report illustrates a case of a non-union treated with the combination of guided bone regeneration and distraction osteogenesis. The present invention relates to a method and system for synchronizing a broadcast stream with a video stream. Today, consumers use a wide range of electronic devices to receive and/or view television, pay-per-view, movie, and sporting event content. For example, consumers have set-top boxes, digital video recorders, home-video game consoles, mobile devices, and personal computers. These consumer electronic devices typically access broadcast-content-streams that are generated by a content-stream provider and that are distributed in the broadcast-content-streams to the various consumer electronic devices. However, in order to access the various types of content, a consumer electronic device must be equipped with an operating system, which makes the device more expensive and requires a relatively-skilled user to install, set-up, and/or configure the operating system. Moreover, different consumers have different interests. Accordingly, a content-stream provider may wish to deliver the content streams to certain consumer electronic devices. For example, a content-stream provider might deliver content streams to a particular consumer electronic device for the enjoyment of a family, but another 3e33713323
