I have coded a basic AudioClipPlayer app. When I press the record button, the recording starts at the 0 position. But I want to start recording at the position where the recording should start, lets say 30 seconds into the file. I have tried the following in an attempt to set the StreamStartPosition: ClipDeviceClosed += AudioSessionManager.CloseClipboard; var audioSessionManager = new AudioSessionManager(1); audioSessionManager.SetStreamProperties(Handle, StreamSessionProperties.StreamStartPosition, position, false, false); ClipDeviceClosed += AudioSessionManager.OpenClipboard; using (var clip = new Clipboard(MediaType.AudioFile, DataFormat.WaveFormatEx)); audioSessionManager.SetStreamProperties(Handle, StreamSessionProperties.Clipboard, clip.Handle, false, false); audioSessionManager.SetStreamProperties(Handle, StreamSessionProperties.StreamStartPosition, position, false, false); The StreamStartPosition value is always 0, and there isn't an exception. I am aware that AudioSessionManager.OpenClipboard is async, so i wrap the two lines in a Task.Run(). How can I make the stream start position set? A: It was a silly mistake. AudioSessionManager.CloseClipboard wasn't closed at the time I tried to set the stream position. That's why it always was 0. I solved it by simply adding a await Task.Delay(10); before calling AudioSessionManager.CloseClipboard. Q: Why did Microsoft not accept a bitcoin to pay developers for F# in the 90's? I know Microsoft didn't accept bitcoin to pay developers for C# in the 90's. But F# or Visual Basic had plenty of good paying users. A: The F# language was first 09e8f5149f
