“For more than three years we have been working in tight collaboration with our development teams and top sports and gaming experts to develop the technology to produce the perfect fit between animations and the players’ movements,” said Jens Steuer, Chief Product Officer at EA Sports. “We are extremely proud of the end result and the process in which our game was made. It is possible because of our continuous commitment to detail and rigorous development process, to which we owe our best sports titles.” EA SPORTS’ Sports Studio has found ways to create more realistic on-pitch movements using new and advanced motion capture. The data from the motion capture suits is delivered to the game engine in real-time, providing a new level of control to players to control their on-pitch actions. “We know from the previous FIFA titles that players look at the game as authentic as possible,” added Scott Sinclair, Head of Sports at EA. “‘HyperMotion’ is another step towards improving that authenticity by creating a more immersive experience and helps deliver a more immersive game.” Players can now control the space in and around the pitch with a completely new way to execute passes, dribble, shoot, head-fake, defend, interact with teammates and control the game. Actions such as ball control, kicking, and diving will feel just as authentic as the real thing.
